M. A. 42 - 77 Engraved Powder Horn. L. (on outer curve) abt. 16 ins.

Butt and tip of nice workmanship. Whole and good, and markings clear. Carved wooden base plug.

Marks:—"Benjamin Corey 1775 Shrewsbury." We are to assume from the pictographs that said Corey's name, address and date were marked upon this already engraved horn when he purchased it; and that he bought it at the "Samuel Barrett Gun Wks, Concord, 1775", since this latter data is engraved in tavern-sign fashion upon a sign-board hung from a gun. Revolutionary War records show that Benjamin Corey of Shrewsbury, Mass., was a Minute Man and later a soldier who served through the war. The gun factory in Concord, Mass., operated by Deacon Samuel Barrett was one of the objects of the British expedition to Concord on the 19th of April, 1775. (They found the shop empty, the contents having been removed.)

An outline map of the peninsula of Boston showing location of British batteries and showing all the wharves where the Americans could land attacking parties.

A cat chasing a rat: A cartouche containing "Powder and Ball Even All": and the admonition "Minute Man be Ready".

(Illustrated Plate 1. Frontispiece)

46 - 78 Engraved Powder Horn. L. (on outer curve) abt. 14 ins.

Similar in workmanship to the horn of Benjamin Corey, his brother, already described; but with plain wooden base plug. A hard-made antique iron nail, in the plug, serves as a cord-fastener. Entirely whole and good; markings clear.

Marks:—"Barton Corey 1775 Shrewsbury." Barton is said to have been brother to Benjamin, and to have been wounded April 19, and rendered unfit to serve later. It is to be assumed that he and Benjamin bought their horns at the same place at the same time in the winter of 1775. The horn bears the sign of the "Barrett Gun Works, Concord, 1775". An outline map shows Boston and the adjacent regions, labeled "Charlestown, Cambridge, Brookline, Roxbury, Dorchester". There is a picture of the British Lion behind here, watched by a Yankee, gun in hand. Beneath it is a cartoon showing the British crown upon kegs of powder. On this horn the "Minute Man" is admonished to "Aim True".

Has the early type of back action lock having a hook, forward, locking to the cone-seat. E. Wesson, the maker, became famous, and in 1847 John R. Chapman wrote a book about "The Improved American Rifle" of Wesson development. This specimen we believe to be the first of its type to appear at an arms sale.
